The leading features of the above Association will correspond with those of the large Metropolitan and Parisian washing establishments, which have met with extensive support and unflinching success.

The formation of this Company owes its origin, mainly, to the widely spread complaints of the inhabitants of Sydney, respecting unsanitary charges, want of punctuality, and the inferior manner attending the washing of their linen.

The Association has made arrangements for the erection of suitable buildings, the employment of experienced hands, and for the efficient and general superintendence of their wash-houses, which shall remedy the present annoying and extortionate abuses.

Their object will be to have the clothes committed to their charge washed with care, speed, and punctuality, and at the uniform price of 2s. per dozen.

The wash-houses will, it is hoped, be in readiness by the commencement of the following month, and all orders will be registered, and receive every necessary attention at the Company's Office.

The Company's delivery-van will call for, and return all clothes (which are duly marked) entrusted to their care.

Application for shares to be made until Monday, January 24th.

11183 SMITH CROFT AND CO.

ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH, PARRAMATTA.

ON Sunday, the 9th ultimo, pursuant to notice, a large and influential public meeting of the parishioners of the Parramatta district was held in the Church, immediately after Divine Service, for the purpose of devising measures to build a new Church in place of the present one. The Rev. Dean Coffey in the chair.

The Rev. gentleman observed that, owing to the present insecure state of the building, it was highly expedient that it should be taken down, and the larger and more commodious edifice erected. He said that, shortly after he had been appointed to the care of the parish some ten years ago, he caused repairs to be effected in the building, and that now it reached a point where only effectual remedial would be to about commencing a new church on a more improved plan. He would not advise such an undertaking, more especially in these times of great expense, if the present edifice could be repaired; but, inasmuch as the building, which they were now assembled, being so infirm, it was deemed the best and most secure plan to take means for the creation of funds to enable him to commence a new church almost on the site of the present one. He then submitted to the meeting the plan and specifications of the intended new church, which will be a beautiful structure of purely Gothic architecture—larger, more commodious, and better adapted to the wants of the faithful, than the present building. It would, he remarked, when completed, be not only an ornament to the town, but also a temple in some sort worthy of the glorious and exalted purpose for which it was intended, to honour and glorify that great and good Being, of whose bounteous beneficence all had so largely partaken; and he had no doubt that they in their return would each and all contribute according to their several means for its erection. The plan submitted to the meeting embraced a noble spire crowning a tower in which a sonorous chime of sweet-toned bells would culminate, with many a merry peal, the inhabitants of Parramatta. He was not, he said, just then in a position to state what the expense of the proposed undertaking might be, nor was he able to inform them when the edifice would be completed—the latter depending chiefly on their exertions; but of this he was certain, judging from many instances of the benevolent generosity of the Parramatta people in such cases, that they would not now lose that character of pious devotion to the cause of holiness, for which he gave them credit elsewhere, and held them up as an example to a neighbouring colony as a bright example of that noble and self-sacrificing spirit in promoting the honour of their Creator. It might be said that these were difficult times to initiate such a project; but he said he was sure it was not impossible; for, no one now in these golden days of plenty could say he was unable to assist in rearing a temple for the worship of Him who blesses the pious and the just with many liberal favours. They could not, therefore, excuse themselves on the plea of want of means, and he was sure that their zealous ardour in the holy cause would absorb all their difficulties. The long exposure of matters of this kind afforded ample proof that it was not the large sums from the rare few, but the small continued contributions from the many, that in course of time formed the great edifice of the church, which, in the end, was completed with much feeling on the part of the faithful in this respect, and stated that the greater number of churches were built by the continued periodical collections. The intended church was to be dedicated in honour of Almighty God under the title of its predecessor (now frail building), the sainted Apostle of the Irish nation: the faithful children of which would, no doubt, here, and on this occasion, not relax their pious efforts in endeavouring to show themselves worthy of that apostle of whose consoling benefits and spiritual treasures they are so abundantly participating. Having fully explained to the meeting the pressing nature of the important object for which they had been convened, the Chairman resumed his seat; upon which the following resolutions were proposed and carried unanimously.

The first resolution was entrusted to Mr. S. Finlay, Esq., who said that after the explanations received from the very Rev. Dean, he deemed it unnecessary to expatiate on the subject of the resolution he had the honour of proposing. Although he had not been long in the parish, he had been struck by the devotedness of the people to the cause of the building, there could now be no doubt after the decisive statements of those gentlemen who had reported on the condition of the edifice, that it is absolutely necessary to proceed with the erection of a new church, and that delay would be a very bad precedent.

Resolved, "That, from the dilapidated and dangerous state of this church, it is necessary to erect a more substantial and more commodious edifice, to be dedicated to the same purpose."

The second resolution was proposed by Mr. Thomas Flynn, who said that it is very necessary for them to set about the good work as soon as may be. They all saw the state of the present building, which he had already pointed out to them, and for the erection of a new church, with these remarks he would submit the second resolution. Resolved, "That, for the purpose of re-building, it is necessary to erect a new church, to be dedicated to the same purpose, and that the people do enter into such subscriptions." Seconded by Mr. Thomas Cahill.

The third resolution was proposed by Mr. J. Ryan, who remarked that the whole work depended upon the good will and activity of the people, who should address themselves to the holy work with all their ardour. He said it was the duty of the faithful to co-operate with their respected pastor in this great work, and that fit and proper persons should be authorized by the present meeting to solicit the donations of the faithful for this most praiseworthy and highly laudable purpose. With a few observations he would submit the following resolutions, which he believed to be appointed by this meeting to solicit the faithful for donations and subscriptions towards the erection of St. Patrick's Church, Parramatta. Seconded by Mr. Garvey.

The Treasurer has announced himself in receipt of the sum of £37 3d., including subscriptions from the following:

GENERAL AUSTRALIAN ASSAY AND REFINING OFFICE.

Respectfully informed

GRADUALLY, under the pressure of circum-

At first the opposition was furious, for although continued abuses command crowds of supporters, and parochial abuses are pre-eminently dangerous to meddle with. The charge of classism was so great, that the police, whether the police would or no, were borne down by the torrent of unpopularity. A striking instance of this occurred on the occasion of the Cold Bath House meeting in 1880, in dispersing which three policemen were killed. The coroner's inquest, although brought in a verdict of "justifiable homicide," the verdict which ought to have been "wilful murder," was of course at once set aside by the Superior Courts as being directly contrary to the facts; but the record of absurdity a coroner's inquest can go when it becomes the mouthpiece of a mob. It was fortunate that so judicious a selection had been made of the two commissioners at the Office and Deftford,—in 1843, of the Recorder of the City of London, and in 1844, of the Arsenal at Woolwich. He was afterwards Secretary to the General Committee of the watching of the Tower of London,—and in the year 1860, of the Regent's Canal Dock. Among his last year's wonders of London none made more favourable impression on our foreign visitors than the police in general, and particularly the Metropolitan Police. The Crystal Palace, when they saw it, attracted their attention, but the Palace, of which they saw most, was an important branch of duty performed by the metropolitan police. The conveyance of prisoners from the several police courts to the prisoners' cells, and the attendance of the prisoners, are provided with a separate compartment for each matter, so that the police are not mixed with any other. The whole number of men employed in this way in each year is about 40,000, and they also occasionally discharge other duties besides those belonging to them as police; they are also employed in the election of poor-law guardians, and in 1845, they were employed in the inland Revenue Office in checking the duties on stage carriages, and they delivered and collected the census papers in 1851.

Those who whimsically observe a policeman quietly walking along his beat would hardly imagine the exceedingly laborious nature of his duty. Of the numerous candidates for admission into the force, not more than one in three are accepted, and the police force is, therefore, a select body, and the rigid discipline which exacts this exertion also insists upon extreme propriety of conduct, and great self-command in the most trying circumstances. At first the policeman's resignation was so great that it was almost impossible to enforce his duty; but the commissioners persevered through every difficulty in enforcing a high standard of conduct, and eventually succeeded in bringing the force into its present remarkable condition. The police force is indebted to the commissioners from personal acquaintance to mark by some donation their sense of the zeal and activity of the police is decisive testimony to their conduct. In 1860 the amount paid

Learning in children and systematic science

From childhood the thief had felt that the policeman is his foe, against whom he cannot contend, from whom he cannot escape but by flight, and by whom he must ultimately be overhauled. This feeling being constantly renewed, grew into a habit, and he was thereafter by all his associates, it reacts on his mind through theirs, until it becomes an instinct which he cannot control. Conscious of his thousand offences, he feels safe only so long as he is unknown. When this defence is gone, he is a thief in the eyes of the law, and his bullying audacity, and follow every look of the police officer like a beaten hound creeping under his master's feet. We see in higher grades of life the servile running after the policeman, the anxiety, and in any case the definite reward, but from a vague hope of reward, and we cannot wonder if these imitate their betters, though they get as little by it. They also take a professional view of the na anything he might wish to learn. From one or other of these motives—jealousy, revenge, the desire to propitiate the policeman, or more than all, the desire to obtain any amount of information may be obtained, provided only that the right man applies in the right quarter. It might be supposed that the right man, knowing that any one of his companions, the petty thieves and the house-pirates, would endeavour to conceal his movements, even from them. But again, the necessary conditions of a criminal life make this impossible. A thief has no home; his attitude is mendacious; he cannot, if he would, associate with persons of whom it is plain that he necessarily with him to frequent those places where such as himself are permitted to do mischief. He knows that in those houses the policeman expects to find him, but even that risk will not keep him away. And the public house of business; for here he meets his associates, gains information, and arranges schemes of plunder. Living thus as it were in public, in passed from the ship, and the landing party

After watching the proceedings with an intensity anxiety which betrayed a personal interest in the issue. Slight as the chance was, it was neglected, and they were immediately arrested. After a short confinement, one of the "three women" went to a beach house, as they called it, where they were to be kept, and the other to see Dyson in the House of Detention, where he had been remanded. She soon joined her companion, and both were packed across the river into Southwark, where they were to be kept until they could be taken to house the preserving detectives followed the trail of each, until they reached their respective homes. Local knowledge being wanted, the Southwark, or M. division was called into action. The woman who had been the "three women" was identified as a mistress of a housebreaker, commonly known by the sobriquet of "The Doctor; and she was soon after ascertained to be conspiring with, and the active assistant of, a noted judicious management; money being wanted, it was, under the advice of the attorney, sent to the attorney at New York, and the whole of the Southwest division on the alert, feelers were put forth in every direction. One man was successful. He was acquainted with a woman who had formerly lived with Mahon, but had been driven out of the house by her husband. Here there had been a quarrel, or whether a woman's jealousy at being supplanted was arising within her, or whether the reward money was motive enough, she consented to give assistance, and the bargain was struck. She was to be paid $100,000, and was to be concealed, for his present companion was faithful to him. But it is the fate of a criminal that she should be false, and she is alike dangerous, and she changed to find out that the reward woman was not to be paid until the next day. She then began would take some to him, and the plan was laid accordingly. When the Saturday night came, the false friend, followed at a safe undressed; Robinson was also arrested, and ing to go away before their arrival, and it seemed doubtful whether there was not some considerable treachery going on. The next place reached was a house in Little Surrey-street, a three-storey red-roof, but as it was a private house, and not by any means a public house, it was entered by honest labour; it was necessary to proceed with much caution. A policeman was found who was a friend of the nearest neighbour, and who learned from him that the house was the property of a man who had lately been supplied to the house. The nearest policeman was acquainted with the owner of the house, and contrived, on some pretext, to get the door opened. The sergeant went in and asked who the lodger was; and a woman, who was a friend of the policeman, listening anxiously, appeared over the banisters, and she was recognised as having been in the gang in the public-house on the night of the burglary. All hesitation was prudent to take great precaution. The celebrity of being the oldest private banking house in London is usually considered to belong to the house of Mr. Francis Child. The looks of Child's house go back to the time of the first Bank of England, the date of Hare's to 1689; and those of Stow's to 1685. Francis's History of the Bank of England was, besides these, many other private banking-houses, or goldsmith-bankers, founded at the period of the establishment of the Bank of England, 1694, and continued by the Act 2 and 4 Anne, c. 9, greater facilities for the negotiation of promissories; and about 1775 the bankers who lived in City established what is known as the "Banking-house," for the purpose of more effectually conducting the exchange with each other. The London banks have long ceased to be banks of circulation. They are now private banks of deposit, banks of discount, banks of agency for country bankers.

There were 21 firms carrying on business east of Temple Bar, who were not members of the Clearing-house. These comprised 14 partners, with 36 different names. Of these 14 partners, 10 were bankers, in the exception of four firms, all of which they were designated as "agents to the salesmen, and wholesale dealers in foreign wines and spirits," another, as "bankers, &c.," another as "Irish merchants and exporters," and another as "bankers." There were three banking firms west of Temple-bar, comprising fifty-one partners with fifty-nine names. One of these firms is described in the return as "navy agents and brokers," another as "bankers and army agents," and a third as "bankers and teachers."

The total number of London private bankers, therefore, will, according to the analysis above

of Newcastle, at the same time as the Order of the Garter, and although it was sent instantly to every one of the great banks in the north, the bank itself stopped. That night the Order in Council issued; by ten the following morning the Order was gazetted, and the mercantile community was left to meditate in terror on the results and motives of an occurrence of which recollection will never be effaced from the minds and breasts of the present generation, the annual returns of Messrs. Lloyd's bank to the shareholders will tell more fully than he himself withdrew from the scene, the conspicuous obscurity of the House of Lords, to the title which was earned by putting his name for five thousand pounds to the warrant list of the Great Exhibition. What a mystery this class of subscriptions was ever since, is a mystery known only to the great misanthropes.

From Mr. Sproat, Plantagenet, the Galloway stock of the Duke of Devonshire, and the Earl of Selkirk. The latter is the only stable to the Galloway farmers, that their stock should have been selected before any in Britain; for we are given to understand other descriptions of stock had been recommended by the same advice and recommendation. The Galloway breed has been the primary. All the stock now sent are two-year-olds. The bull bought from Mr. Graham at Leicestershire obtained the first prize as a two-year-old at the last spring show at Gloucester. The cattle were sent to Mr. Gibb, of the same name, Liverpool, to whom they were forwarded to destination; and we have no doubt, as we know him well, that he will do his part. I cannot quit this subject without casting a rapid glance hence forward into the history of the Galloway stock, and asking whether it will be found that they seem then to some of our old graziers to have been sent to the Galloway country to hear of large shipments of stock from St. Petersburg, consigned to the imperial agent at Smithfield market.
